Of this you have a familiar example when a poker is put in the fire. But if you hold one end of a long stick of charcoal in a flame, the charcoal will burn at that end, but you will have no difficulty in maintaining your hold of the other end. This difference is expressed by saying that metals are better conductors of heat than non-metals. Of course the metals are not all exactly alike in other particulars, though they all agree in having a bright surface when polished, and in being good conductors of heat. Metals differ much in colour as well as in other respects; copper is red, silver is white, gold yellow, iron grey, and so on. One or two elements, like...
