Excerpt: .and have not forgotten the feelings of youthful days. I ll venture, thought Cyril, that you are quite out in your conjecture respecting mine. The Cardinal continued. It rejoices me, Baron Cyril, that you exhibit so many tokens of devotion to the faith of your ancestors. These are fearful times, when heresy spreads its baleful poison over the land, and is not rooted out; nay, even meets with encouragement and increasing converts. I trust not increasing, my lord; surely the pestilence will die away, and leave not a record to show where its path has been. If our prayers succeed it will be so; but we have sinned and deserve punishment. It is vain to deny, that errors have crept in and been fostered; we are now experiencing the effects of too much indulgence. It would ill beseem me to question one who has...
